Sleep-Request Revocations

If any routine in the sleep queue denies a sleep request, the Power Manager sends a sleep-request revocation to every routine that it has already called with a sleep request. Your routine must reverse whatever steps it followed when it prepared to receive a sleep demand. A communications application that prevents users from opening new sessions while it is waiting to receive a sleep demand, for example, might once again allow users to open new sessions.